

CALL FOR ABSTRACTS FOR A SPECIAL SESSION:

“Situating ethics, justice and equity in transport planning”

Track: Movement and Infrastructure

This special session seeks papers that drawing on empirical evidence to explore the relationships between transport governance, urban citizenship and planning outcomes and the ethical dimensions of transport planning, especially in relation to social equity and environmental justice. We also welcome papers that consider the social function of transport – mobility infrastructure as commons - and the ethics of envisioning and modelling urban and transport futures. All up, this special session seeks to offer new empirical and conceptual insight into the ethics of transport planning in 21st century Australian urban and regional settings.

Topics of Interest

- Inclusion: the relationship between transport governance, urban citizenship and planning outcomes
- Distribution: foregrounding questions of social and environmental justice in transport planning
- Well-being: the influence of transport provision and choice on health outcomes in communities
- Experience: Recovering the sociological function of transport—mobility infrastructure as commons
- Accountability: making politicians and decision-makers accountable to the evidence
- Knowledge: the ethics of envisioning and modelling urban and transport futures

Convenors: Ian Woodcock, Rebecca Clements, James Whitten & Crystal Legacy

We cordially invite colleagues to submit an abstract for this special session at SOAC2019. Colleagues can submit either a 250-word abstract for the peer-reviewed paper option (abstracts are due 8th March), or an extended 800-word abstract for the non-peer reviewed presentation option (abstracts are due 31 March). This special session is aimed at developing material for a special issue in an academic journal. See <http://soac2019.com.au/call-for-abstracts/> for more details on the abstract submission process.
